

Welcome to the Common Ground Café!

Sunday, December 3, 2017

Lullaby for the Restless Soul
A Study of Psalm 131

www.hillcrest.church

As a child, what was the bedtime routine your parents set for you? Alternately, describe the bedtime routine you set for your kids.

In Psalm 131, the poet confessed that in the past he let ambitions rule his life. He compared his soul to an unruly child that needed to be quieted. Read Psalm 131.

In the Bible, we see two views of ambition:

What's wrong with ambition according to Galatians 5:19-21, Philippians 1:15-17, James 3:13-16?

What's right with ambition according to Ecclesiastes 9:10 and Daniel 1:17-20.

How can we reconcile the cautions against ambition with the encouragements to be ambitious?

Why We Should Wean Off Of Selfish Ambition

Pastor Tom suggested four consequences of letting selfish ambition rule our lives.

First: When ambition rules, it keeps us from simply enjoying our God-given talents.

Read Ecclesiastes 5:18. Why does this verse regard meaningful work as rewarding?

Read 1 Thessalonians 4:11. Is this the message from most speakers at graduation ceremonies or do they promote a different vision of a fulfilled life?

Second: When ambition rules, it can keep us from living a balanced life.

Pastor Tom said we need to see life as a pentathlon. In sports, what is a pentathlon? Can a competitor who excels at just one event expect to win the pentathlon?

The pentathlon of life includes work, family, church, community, and personal growth. If someone focuses just on work, how are the other four areas impacted?

Third: When ambition rules, it makes us jealously compare our lives with others.

When we measure our worth by achievements, how does that impact our relationships with those who become more successful than us? How does that impact our relationships with those who fail in the areas where we're successful?

Fourth: When ambition rules, it leads us to justify ethical compromises.

Read Proverbs 22:1. In light of prominent athletes, politicians, musicians, and screen stars, does the world tend to agree with this verse? Why should we prize integrity over riches?

How We Should Wean Off Of Selfish Ambition

How does Matthew 18:1-4 compare to Psalm 131?

In Matthew 18:1-4, Jesus said we would have to change in order to become like trusting children. Pastor Tom suggested four ways to change and wean ourselves from ungodly ambition. Use your sermon notes to fill in the blanks below.

First: Begin a personal _____ with God.

How is finding our identity and worth in God better than trying to find it in our achievements?

Second: Pursue excellence in _____ areas of life.

In the "Pentathlon of Life" discussed earlier, which one of the five will you choose to improve this upcoming week? How?

Third: Find ways to _____ what you're presently doing and what you presently have.

In "Soak Up the Sun," Sheryl Crow has a great line about finding peace: "It's not having what you want; it's wanting what you've got." What advice would you give someone who needs to learn contentment?

Fourth: Make your _____ clear.

Mission statements are popular in business. How does a mission statement help a business make decisions and determine success? Could a mission statement help you in the same way? What's your life's mission?

Conclusion

In Psalm 131, the poet ends by advising others to practice the trust and contentment he's learned.

Are you at peace inside to the point that you could recommend following Christ as a path to inner peace?

How should gathering with this Life Group help us grow in trust and contentment?

Close with praise reports and prayer requests